

Favoriser le bien-être et l'intégration sociale de la communauté racisée LGBTQA+ de Toronto et Ottawa

Carlo Charles and Arnaud Baudry,
University of Windsor and FrancoQueer Toronto

Abstract

Using community-based ethnography, this research report examines the profile of fifteen racialized LGBTQIA+ immigrants and asylum seekers in Toronto and Ottawa, including their perception of their health according to a holistic approach, their relationship with health, social and community services, and their outlook for the future. This report also includes recommendations to facilitate their access to services and their social integration, as well as to promote their well-being. This ethnographic research was conducted by Dr. Carlo Handy Charles and Laurent Francis Ngoumou thanks to a CIHR support grant for Community-Led Projects on LGBTQIA/2S Wellness through an Intersectional Lens, coordinated by FrancoQueer's Director, Arnaud Baudry. The CIHR Institute of Gender and Health (CIHR-IGH) launched a program to support community-led projects on the health and wellness of lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, questioning, intersex, asexual and Two-Spirit (LGBTQIA/2S) communities. The goal of this new initiative was to provide an opportunity for community organizations with no prior research experience to obtain grant funding to help evaluate the reach, effectiveness, and benefits of community-based interventions to improve the health and wellness of LGBTQIA/2S communities.

Biography

Carlo Handy Charles is an Assistant Professor of Sociology and a Faculty Affiliate at the Black Scholars Institute at the University of Windsor. He is also a Visiting Scholar in the Department of Sociology at the University of Michigan—Ann Arbor and a Research Fellow at the CNRS French Collaborative Institute on Migrations in Paris. His research explores the intersection of international migration, race, sexualities, and socioeconomic inequalities among migrants and nonmigrants in the Americas, the Caribbean, and Europe. His current book project examines the meanings and impacts of queer transnational relationships on Haiti and its diaspora.

Arnaud Baudry is Executive Director of the Toronto-based organization, FrancoQueer. He has extensive experience in the digital media industry in both France and Canada. Baudry is a community leader who serves the French-speaking LGBTQIA+ community in the region of Toronto and in Ontario.
