QUALITATIVE INTERVIEWS: DESIGN, RECRUITMENT, ETHICS AND CONDUCTING

with Marshia Akbar, Ryerson University

WORKSHOP LEADERS:

Marshia Akbar is Senior Research Associate, CERC Migration, Ryerson University. Marshia's research addresses how social inequalities and settlement policies shape the labour market integration of migrants in Canada. She has a PhD from York University. Marshia has taught Geography, Sociology and Methods courses at York University and Ryerson University.

WHAT?

Qualitative interviews are an important research method that draws on a fundamental mode of human interaction. Participants describe their experiences and perspectives in their own terms, and a two-way 'performance' ensues involving verbal and non-verbal codes. To master the art of interviewing, the researcher needs to understand how inter-subjective knowledge is produced.

IN THIS WORKSHOP YOU WILL LEARN:

- How to interpret the lived experiences and subjective truth expressed by the participant,
- What does the interview setting convey in terms of position and power?
- How to optimize recruitment of participants,
- What are the ethical considerations for conducting interviews?
- How to prepare and carry out a successful interview.

HOW?

The workshop will provide step-by-step techniques and include discussion on their ethical and methodological underpinnings. Teamwork and hands-on exercises provide an opportunity for practice. Detailed instructions for workshop exercises will be provided to participants beforehand.
