Abstract

State your research question and aims. Give a brief description of the methodology. Summarize your most significant findings or arguments. State your conclusion. The abstract should be a single paragraph. Master's degrees: 150 words Doctoral degrees: 350 words. Use plain text only; Do not include graphs, charts, tables, references, or illustrations in an abstract. The abstract should fit on a single page.

Keywords: Maximum 6 words, or phrases; separated by semi-colons; sentence case; no period after all papers need an abstract

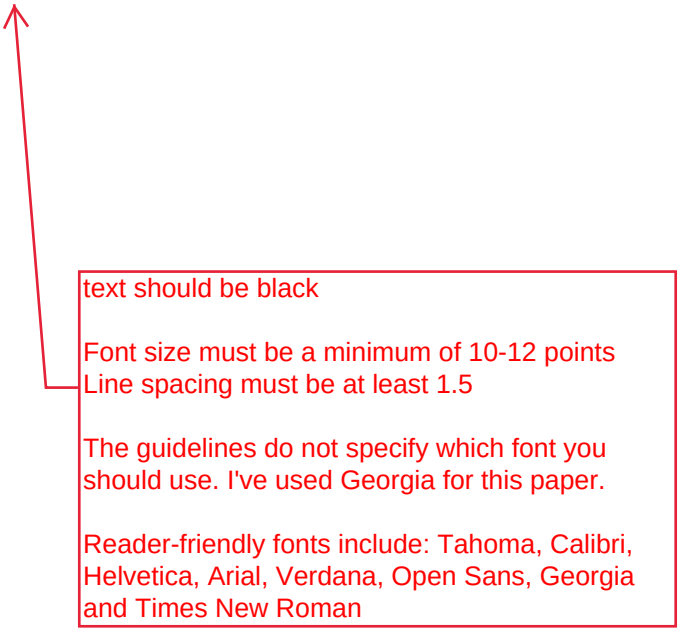
keywords optional, but recommended

Acknowledgements

The acknowledgments page recognizes the people and organizations who have had a direct impact on your efforts to complete this thesis/project/dissertation.

You should include in your thanks:

- Your primary research supervisor
- Members of your supervisory committee.
- Any professors, lecturers, academics, or librarians that helped you understand the topic or methodologies.
- Any tutors, mentors or advisors.
- People who provided you with technical support essential to your research
- Funding agencies such as Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council (SSHRC), the Ontario Graduate Scholarship program, the Edward S. Rogers Sr. Graduate Student Fellowship program, etc.



Dedication

(optional)

The dedication page normally recognizes people who supported your studies as a graduate student and or those who provided inspiration or motivation.

This could include a parent, sibling, or other family member, a spouse or partner, a friend, a supervisor, a colleague, etc.

There are students who dedicate their papers to people they have never met.

Dedicating the paper to someone or a group of people is a way to honour them.

In any case, keep the dedication brief – one to three sentences is typical.
