

Funding opportunity for Ryerson graduate students in the field of migration

The Canada Excellence Research Chair in Migration and Integration program at Ryerson University provides financial support through the CERC Migration Graduate Student Stipend to successful graduate students applying to study in the area of migration.

How does a student qualify?

A limited number of stipends will be awarded to top, full-time MA and PhD students who are pursuing an advanced degree at Ryerson University. Students must be studying a topic related to migration or migrant integration.

What is the stipend amount?

A select number of qualifying students will be eligible to receive the following:

For Masters programs: up to $10,000. Available to incoming first- or second-year MA students.

For PhD programs: up to $25,000 per year, renewable for a total of four years, subject to annual review. Available to first-year PhD students entering a PhD program.

If a student receives funding from external sources, a top-up stipend may be possible. Full details can be found on the CERC Migration website.

What other benefits come with the CERC Migration Stipend?

Stipend recipients become an integral part of a vibrant research team led by Anna Triandafyllidou, the Canada Excellence Research Chair in Migration and Integration. Students will:

- be mentored by a member of the CERC Migration research team
- have their own, dedicated work space at CERC Migration offices
- attend monthly Migration Working Group meetings and present their research at a dedicated session
- receive methodology and professional development training by attending Migration Research Gyms

The Canada Excellence Research Chair in Migration and Integration program is a new research hub at Ryerson University dedicated to advancing our understanding of contemporary issues in migration.

For more information, go to www.ryerson.ca/cerc-migration/scholarships/