Building Mental Health Resiliency

Need a Boost? Need to Improve Your Grades? Take a Look.

School is hard sometimes. But learning better, feeling better, and doing better is possible.

What is Thriving in Action?

Thriving in Action is a Ryerson University initiative designed to help struggling students learn how to thrive, academically and personally. Thriving in Action is open, fluid, non-linear, and expansive with the aim of offering room to explore and play. It isn't intended as a step-by-step course, as one size fits all, or as a one-stop-shop of resilience skills. Rather, it's an uplifting, online guide-on-the-side for when school life might feel challenging, lonely, or confusing.

In addition to sessions being offered in each Fall semester, they also make their resources available online at tia.ryerson.ca, a holistic resilience e-library.

In this program, you will learn how to:

- Build motivation and optimism
- Be more self-compassionate
- Be more resilient
- Manage your time more effectively
- Take better notes in class and study effectively
- Do well on a test

This program has been running for four years now, and its graduates are reporting:

1. Better grades
2. Improved Confidence
3. Deepened connection to the campus community

Did You Know?

This Ryerson program has been so successful, it is now being implemented at more than 35 Universities and Colleges across Canada!

What to Expect

This resilience resource is organized around 12 themes, each ending in “-ness.” Each of these “-nesses,” from 'appreciativeness' to 'skillfulness', represent a window into a range of skill-building exercises around a disposition, or way of being, that a student who wishes to thrive may choose to explore.

Thriving in Action Online is an open, flexible resource. You can explore it in order, one lesson, activity, exercise, or reflection after another, following the laid out sequence. Or, you can jump around, picking and choosing and practicing what you like in any order. Each component is both self-contained and connected to what comes before and after.

Student Profile

Thriving in Action taught me about setting healthy boundaries for myself, and learning about taking care of mental health and doing well in school. The website teaches methods on how to set healthy boundaries. I often have trouble balancing my health and school and once school is done I feel guilty for not taking care of myself. This course provides the skills required to do well in school and take care of your health, and overall how to achieve greatness.
