UninSHured: Uninsured Immigrants' Social & Health Care Use

An estimated 500,000 people in Canada do not have legal immigration status, and many lack provincial health insurance. The UninSHured Project will examine how uninsured immigrants access, delay, or avoid health and social care.

Using a mixed-methods design, the study will include:

- Linked Ontario CHC and ICES data
- Comparisons between uninsured immigrants, insured immigrants, and long-term residents
- Approximately 30 interviews with uninsured immigrants

The research will explore structural barriers, cultural influences, relationships, and trust.

KEY RESPONSIBILITIES

Co-developing interview tools, conducting interviews, supporting ethics processes, analyzing qualitative data using NVivo, contributing to publications and policy outputs, and supervising undergraduate students.

QUALIFICATIONS

Experience in qualitative interviewing, familiarity with trauma-informed approaches, and the ability to work in interdisciplinary teams. Relevant language skills are an asset. Applicants must meet the academic eligibility requirements for the postdoctoral fellowship or PhD studentship.
